UK Outlook for Sunday 14 Feb 2021 to Sunday 28 Feb 2021:
Confidence is low for mid-February onwards however similar conditions look most likely with high pressure remaining to the north of the UK bringing overall colder than average conditions and below average precipitation amounts. Through this period the risk of wintry hazards continues to be greater than normal with snowfall most likely in eastern areas. There remains the possibility of less cold interludes occurring from the west and southwest bringing wetter and milder conditions. In such instances, at the boundary between cold and mild air masses there remains the risk of disruptive snowfall.
